SCOTLAND

with Tony Freeth

Tony Freeth (BSc Eng Hons (Sussex), MBA(Heriot-Watt)) is an engineer and entrepreneur who recently retired from corporate life to spend more time on research. His professional experience started in Nuclear and Biomedical science but has spent the last 25 years on developing Internet technology for commercial and community applications, most recently coworking. Tony comes from Cornwall or Kernow, which is the most southerly outpost of the Celtic fringe. He has, though, adopted Scotland as his home and nationality. He believes practising engineering without literature is to travel without a map. Also known to have used the term 'dialectic' to a conference of real estate investors and yet survived.
